July, 2017 Performance Summary

Our numbers spiked on all of our platforms because of the flood. Communication has changed a lot since the 2013 flood, giving the County a greater ability to distribute messages directly to our audiences. While we still rely on the media to get the most recent flood information out, we can now communicate to our audiences directly through email, social media, and our website. We individually messaged/emailed with dozens of residents, often assisting them with finding the resources and information they need. On social media alone, we reached over one million people during the flood. Our email database has grown over the years too, and led to more than 76,000 emails opened.

While our numbers are high for the month, we recognize several opportunities for improvement for the next emergency. This includes: Having a “go pack” ready with essential electronics, better communication with employees, installing multiple computer monitors at the EOC so Communications can complete tasks faster, and doing a better job at assigning specific roles for each Communications team member.
